Lancaster based singer/songwriter gets back on the road performing his special blend of acoustic and classic folk guitar music both as a solo performer and as a band configuration when the performance requires it.

Donna Callon from the Citizen said “As I was wondering through Lancaster City Centre, I heard soft melodies drifting out from Ye John O’Gaunt on Market Street. The John O’Gaunt has always been a hive of activity and this particular Thursday was no exception as David Woods, a local lad with heaps of talent, was playing.

If you are a folk music lover then Dave is your man as he twists many different songs and they come out the other end in fine shape. There was something in there for everyone, including a bit of mouth organ for extra effect. The Soft melodies were perfect and Dave and his guitars created just the right atmosphere for a Thursday night.

The mix of contemporary music with superb finger work to create a folk style left the punters wanting more and Dave will definitely be back. The banter in between songs gave a personal feel to the performance, which is very rare with a live act, you felt involved and part of the action, someone to look out for in the future”.

The John O'Gaunt fanzine commented

“Lancaster born David Woods is a fine singer and guitarist whose repertoire covers a range of styles. He plays ragtime guitar, sings contemporary folk songs by the likes of James Taylor and Neil Young and his own compositions.”
